3 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

BALTIMORE POLICE OFFICER ACQUITTED IN FREDDIE GRAY DEATH

A Baltimore police officer Edward Nero was acquitted on all charges in the 2015 death of Freddie Gray. Baltimore City Circuit Court Judge Barry Williams, who heard the case in a bench trial, issued the verdict before a packed courtroom. Nero, 30, had faced misdemeanor charges of second-degree assault, reckless endangerment and two counts of misconduct in office. There were no initial signs of rioting after the verdict but a group of protesters chased members of Nero's family into a parking garage, yelling, "No justice, no peace." Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake issued a statement urging calm and said Nero would face an administrative review by the police department. REUTERS

FED AWARDS $78.11 BILLION IN REVERSE REPOS

2 The Federal Reserve on Monday awarded $78.11 billion of one-day, fixed-rate reverse repurchase agreements to 38 bidders at an interest rate of 0.25 percent, the New York Fed said on its website. It was the biggest award since $89.12 billion to 44 bidders on April 1. On Friday, the Fed allotted $60.34 billion in three-day reverse repos to 28 bidders, including Wall Street dealers, money market mutual funds and mortgage finance agencies, also at an interest rate of 0.25 percent. The reverse repurchase agreement program is seen as a critical policy tool for the U.S. central bank to drain money from the financial system in an effort to achieve its interest rate objectives. STATES ON ZIKA'S FRONTLINE SEE BIG GAPS IN FUNDING, EXPERTISE

3 In Mississippi, a small team of entomologists has begun the first survey of mosquito populations in decades. Experts do not believe the kind of mosquitoes most likely to carry the Zika virus are active in the state, but they cannot know for sure. By contrast, the Florida Keys Mosquito Control District has been active since the late 1920s. With an annual budget of over $15 million, it now deploys four helicopters, two airplanes and 33 inspectors covering 125 square miles. Because they are funded by local taxpayer dollars, U.S. mosquito control programs reflect deep economic disparities between communities, leaving some at-risk locations badly unprepared for the virus that is spreading through the Americas. Meet the chipper Blue Line driver who fends off commuter blues

SPENCER BUELL
spencer.buell@metro.us

Take a look around any MBTA train on a given day at rush hour, and it's basically just a crowd of groggy commuters staring at their phones (or flipping through the Metro).

But what if you could start your day not by awkwardly avoiding eye contact for 20 minutes, but with a friendly hello?

That's where Helen Antenucci comes in. The 74-year-old Blue Line driver, who loves the New England Aquarium and can appreciate a sunny day with the best of them, has spent nearly two decades greeting passengers with a little extra joy on their way to work.

"Good morning and what a wonderful morning it is," she said through the speakers Monday morning, as the 8:30 a.m. train left Orient Heights. "The sun's shining. It doesn't get much better than this!"

An East Boston resident who's spent most of her life in the neighborhood, Antenucci got her start with the MBTA 21 years ago, and she's spent her career with the T trying to brighten people's days.

Some passengers have become friends, others fans.

"They've been wonderful," she said. "I had a young girl get up and tell me her day started awful and her whole day changed just by someone saying 'good morning.' I said, 'You know what? You have a beautiful smile and you could make somebody else's day.'"

"She goes above and beyond what the customer relations desk wants you to do," said Jimmy O'Brien, president of the Boston Carmen's Union. "She puts a lot of pride and effort into what she does."

It's not for everybody, though, and she knows it.

Take Kristin Dukes, a Simmons professor on her way to work on Monday, for example. It's a bit of a love-hate relationship, she said.

"It depends on the mood I'm in. Sometimes she makes me laugh," Dukes said. "She's always so happy and sometimes I don't want her to be happy. I'm just being honest: Do we look like happy people?"

Antenucci has heard worse. She said she's heard negative reviews from people on their way out of the train, who made it clear they didn't want to be bothered — "the 'F' word" has been used, she can report.

"I don't internalize that," she said. "I just feel that people have a right to feel the way they do and I can't change that."

> "You know what? We're very lucky. If we have to deal with snow, there's people who deal with a heck of a lot more than we do."
> Antenucci

Mostly what she remembers are all the times she's been stopped out in public by people who recognize her voice. It's happened more times than she can count, she said.

When she passes through the New England Aquarium, dozens of times a day, she usually informs passengers that it's "one of my favorite places."

The aquarium thing is part of her brand, she said, and it's a quirk people seem to remember.

"I went to a wake once and someone said, 'You're the one that loves the aquarium!'" Antenucci said. "I said, 'I do but maybe now is not a great time.'"

From her driver's seat, when it comes to the day-to-day tribulations of signal issues and customer complaints, she's almost Zen-like. That's especially true when it comes to the weather, despite her proximity to weather-related calamity.

"For me, each day is a gift. This is who I am all year long. I might be certifiable, I don't know," she said, laughing. "You know what? We're very lucky. If we have to deal with snow, there's people who deal with a heck of a lot more than we do."

Tom Brady to appeal Deflategate suspension

"The facts here are so drastic and so apparent that the court should rehear it."

The legal team representing Patriots quarterback Tom Brady has announced that they will appeal a federal court ruling that had reinstated a four-game suspension related to the Deflategate scandal.

On Monday, Brady attorney Ted Olson told "GMA" that NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell fumbled the case and that Brady's legal team will be seeking a hearing in front of the entire Second Circuit Court of Appeals, WCVB reported.

"The facts here are so drastic and so apparent that the court should rehear it," Olson was quoted by WCVB.

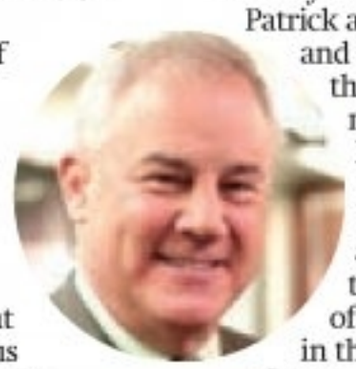
Monday was the deadline for Brady to file documents to appeal the four-game suspension, WHDH reported. Without an appeal, Brady would miss four games at the start of the season.

"[Goodell] completely ignored the schedule of penalties for equipment-related violations," Olson's appeal was quoted by WCVB. "He appointed himself to review his own decision and then he affirmed his own decision on different grounds than he specified the first time around."

Now, seven of the 13 judges on the Second Circuit Court must agree to the hearing, Fox 25 stated. If the hearing is deemed unnecessary by that court, Brady's next appeal could be to the Supreme Court.

Battling cancer, MBTA GM plans to retire

MBTA General Manager Frank DePaola has been battling cancer and plans to retire June 30, state officials announced on Monday.



"As some of you know, Frank has been battling cancer for months and he has now come to the conclusion that he cannot focus adequately on his health and the treatment he needs while carrying out the heavy responsibilities of the GM's job," Transportation Secretary Stephanie Pollack wrote in a memo Monday.

The move will return the T to a state of transition in a little over a month and midway through a roughly year-long project to overhaul internal processes, repair decades-old equipment and improve performance at an agency that's come under the spotlight for its problems.

The former highway chief who briefly served as transportation secretary at the end of the Patrick administration and beginning of the Baker administration, DePaola took over the troubled transit agency after the departure of Beverly Scott in the late winter of 2015.

On Monday, Pollack wrote that she had appointed MBTA Chief Administrator Brian Shortsleeve, a former Marine and business executive, as acting general manager as of July 1, and that MBTA Chief of Operations Jeff Gonneville would take on oversight of safety and accessibility.

Beset by managerial quandaries and a more than $7 billion repair backlog, the MBTA has had regular turnover at the top. SHNS

Matt Damon: From janitor to commencement

The "Good Will Hunting" actor will be the guest speaker at this year's Massachusetts Institute of Technology graduation ceremony.

Award winning actor Matt Damon — a Cambridge native who shot to prominence with his portrayal of a mathematically gifted MIT janitor in the 1997 film "Good Will Hunting" — will be the guest speaker at MIT's 2016 commencement exercises, the university announced Monday.

Damon won an Academy Award and a Golden Globe Award for co-writing the screenplay of "Good Will Hunting" with Ben Affleck. He has since portrayed an astronaut stranded on Mars in last fall's critically acclaimed hit "The Martian," a World War II soldier trapped in France in "Saving Private Ryan" (1998) and a deranged liar in the 1999 psychological thriller "The Talented Mr. Ripley."

"I am humbled and thrilled by this invitation," Damon said in a statement released by the university. "I feel a deep affinity for MIT, having grown up in the neighborhood. It's quite an honor to be the commencement speaker at a school that I couldn't have gotten into."

Damon is a 1988 alumnus of Cambridge Rindge and Latin School. He attended Harvard University, where he performed in student theater and in a variety of minor professional roles. Damon left Harvard in 1992, one semester short of receiving his bachelor's degree in English, to pursue opportunities in acting.

MIT President L. Rafael Reif will deliver the traditional charge to graduates.

"I am thrilled that Mr. Damon will be with us at commencement," Reif said. "Through his art, this son of Cambridge has made us think about our world in new ways, and through his service, he has made it a better place."

The entire graduation ceremony will be webcast live at www.mit.edu.

Sanders rejects deal on Puerto Rico, offers alternative

Breaking with the Obama administration, Sanders called on Senate colleagues to instead back an alternative he has proposed to allow the U.S. territory the same access to restructure its debt in bankruptcy court that is afforded to municipalities.

Bernie Sanders GETTY IMAGES

Democratic presidential candidate Sen. Bernie Sanders on Monday rejected a bipartisan deal reached in the House of Representatives on legislation to address Puerto Rico's debt crisis, calling it a concession to Wall Street.

Lawmakers in the House of Representatives last week unveiled a bill, hammered out in talks between lawmakers from both parties, that included a framework for restructuring Puerto Rico's $70 billion in debt and putting the island's financial operations under the control of a federal oversight board.

A House vote is expected in the first week of June, ahead of a $1.9 billion debt payment due on July 1, but any legislation would have to clear the Senate as well.

Democratic congressional leaders have acknowledged disagreements with some parts of the bill but said negotiations had led to a workable compromise, and the Obama administration has urged Congress to quickly pass it.

"It is critical that Congress pass this as there are very significant bond payments due in July," U.S. Treasury Secretary Jack Lew said last week. "Time is of the essence."

Sanders' rival for the Democratic nomination, Hillary Clinton, has also backed the legislation.

But Sanders, who represents Vermont as an independent but who caucuses with Democrats, said Wall Street would benefit at the expense of Puerto Rico's workers.

"This legislation looks out for the needs of Wall Street vulture funds first and foremost. That is unacceptable," he wrote in a letter to Senate colleagues on Monday.

He cited provisions exempting residents from new overtime protections and allowing minimum wage on the island to dip to $4.25 for a period of up to five years, far lower than the U.S. minimum wage of $7.25.

Instead, Sanders said the U.S. Federal Reserve and Treasury Department could find other solutions, such as providing loans to Puerto Rico's electric authority and water agency, and directly purchasing new bonds issued by the U.S. commonwealth. REUTERS

BRIEF

Supreme Court rules for black Georgia death row inmate

The Supreme Court on Monday effectively overturned a black man's 1987 conviction for murdering a white woman, rebuking Georgia prosecutors for unlawfully excluding black potential jurors in picking an all-white jury that condemned him to death.

The 7-1 ruling handed a major victory to Timothy Foster, who is 48 now and was 18 at the time of the 1986 killing of Queen Madge White, a 79-year-old retired schoolteacher, in Rome, Georgia. Prosecutors, however, still could seek a new trial.

Black convicts make up a disproportionately high percentage of death row inmates in the United States. Opponents of capital punishment assert that the American criminal justice system discriminates against black defendants.

During jury selection, all four black members of the pool of potential jurors were "struck" by prosecutors, meaning they were removed from consideration. Prosecutors gave reasons not related to race for their decisions to exclude them.

Chief Justice John Roberts, who wrote the ruling, said prosecution notes introduced into evidence that shed light on the jury selection "plainly belie the state's claim that it exercised its strikes in a 'color blind' manner. The sheer number of references to race in that file is arresting."

The notes showed that the prosecution marked the names of the black prospective jurors with a "B," highlighted them in green and circled the word "black" next to the race question on juror questionnaires. REUTERS

US lifts arms ban on old foe Vietnam as China tensions simmer

The United States announced a complete end to its arms embargo on Vietnam on Monday, a historic step that draws a line under the two countries' old enmity and underscores their shared concerns about China's growing military clout.

The move came during President Barack Obama's first visit to Hanoi, which his hosts described as the arrival of a warm spring and a new chapter in relations between two countries that were at war four decades ago.

Obama has made a strategic "rebalance" toward Asia a centerpiece of his foreign policy.

The decision to lift the arms trade ban suggested such concerns outweighed arguments that Vietnam had not done enough to improve its human rights record and Washington would lose leverage for reforms.

Obama told a joint news conference with Vietnamese President Tran Dai Quang that disputes in the South China Sea should be resolved peacefully and not by whoever "throws their weight around." But he insisted the arms embargo shift was not linked to China.

President Barack Obama walks past Vietnam's President Tran Dai Quang after a news conference at the International Convention Center in Hanoi on Monday. GETTY IMAGES

"The decision to lift the ban was not based on China or any other considerations. It was based on our desire to complete what has been a lengthy process of moving towards normalization with Vietnam," he said. Obama later added his visit to a former foe showed "hearts can change and peace is possible."

In 2014, the Obama administration eased the decades-old arms embargo to allow its former Cold War enemy to buy maritime surveillance and "security-related" systems to strengthen it with China in mind.

Now, Hanoi will be able to buy a full range of U.S. weapons and military equipment. Immediate big-ticket purchases are not expected but Vietnam's military strategists are likely to seek U.S. drones, radar, coastal patrol boats and possibly P-3 Orion surveillance aircraft.

The sale of arms, Obama said, would depend on Vietnam's human rights commitments, and be made on a case-by-case basis. REUTERS

Awful man troll threatens Taylor Swift and friends

Proof again that the Internet is awful: One of the many psychos who can vomit the contents of his warped mind thanks to the anonymity of social media has taken his ire out on celebrities. And, of course, his targets are beautiful women. According to TMZ, Taylor Swift, Cara Delevingne, Gigi Hadid and Jaime King are among the troll's prey. The celebs are being haunted on Twitter with "poetry" like, "I will kill your friends and I am excited about it"; "gonna give it a shot, but I probably gonna end up murdering your friends"; and "people gon die die die die!" Police have yet to identify this stranger, or suss out if he's just some men's rights activist in a basement. But this shows once more — and we mean it — that pretty people have it bad, too.

Idina Menzel totally cool with Elsa getting a girlfriend

"I think it's great," she told Entertainment Tonight at Sunday's Billboard Music Awards. "Disney's just gotta contend with that," she continued. "I'll let them figure that out…. No matter what, [Elsa] changed my life."

Fans have been using the Twitter hashtag #GiveElsaAGirlfriend to encourage Disney to give the princess a same-sex partner in "Frozen 2," following a tweet from feminist tween writer Alexis Isabel Moncada on April 30. Moncada penned a first-person essay for MTV explaining the viral movement.

"The Last Days of Disco" alumni Chloe Sevigny and Kate Beckinsale reunite for Whit Stillman's Jane Austen adaptation, "Love & Friendship," now in theaters. BERNARD WALSH, AMAZON STUDIOS, ROADSIDE ATTRACTIONS

But at least she gets to reunite with Whit Stillman for the Jane Austen movie "Love & Friendship."

MATT PRIGGE
matt.prigge@metro.us

When Chloe Sevigny played a young, upwardly mobile New Yorker in Whit Stillman's 1998 dramedy "The Last Days of Disco," she was primarily known for "Kids." It was a bit of a gearshift, but it helped establish her as one of the most exciting young actors working. With "Love & Friendship," she returns to the world of Whit, who this time adapts one of his clearest inspirations: Jane Austen. Based on the author's early novella "Lady Susan," it reunites Sevigny with "Disco" co-star Kate Beckinsale, who plays a 30-something widow scheming for a new husband. Sevigny plays Alicia, her similarly savvy best friend.

GETTY IMAGES

Given the films you'd done before "The Last Days of Disco," how did you convince Stillman you'd be good for the more buttoned-up Charlotte?

I think I may have lied and said I went to prep school, to seem more WASPy, thinking he would like that. I probably said, "Oh, I just came from the train from Connecticut." I made all of that up. And somehow he cast me. I love that movie. A Halloween or two ago, I remember coming out of a party at my brother's club. And a girl was dressed as me in "Last Days of Disco." She had my top and my hairdo and my trousers. I took a picture with her.

It's good you get cited for that and not only "Kids."

I still have that T-shirt, the one with the blue ringer. They had a 20-year anniversary screening at BAM. I thought, "Maybe I should wear that T-shirt." Then I thought it would freak people out. Too weird. [Laughs] But I think I should bust it out at some point.

Looking at "Kids" now, it's a good reminder that New York is no longer remotely that cool. The Village is all drunk NYU kids.

Yeah. Where are the weirdos? That's what I always say. I was wearing some crazy outfit downtown, in a restaurant. My boyfriend said, "That couple's looking at you like you're nuts." I was like, "Good, someone's got to be nuts in this town." It's so boring now. It's all so staid. I hope I can bring a little freakiness down here, for crying out loud.

Back to Stillman: A lot of indies tend towards naturalistic dialogue, but his is very written.

His dialogue is very heightened, and he's very specific about tone and intonation. It can be a little difficult working for Whit. You feel like you're under a microscope. You want to perform well for him, but sometimes it's like, "Oh my God, it's like an IQ test."

Girl power

The characters played by you and Kate Beckinsale know how to get what they want. Usually strong women like that are punished, though movies do seem to be evolving, slowly, to include more characters like that — though not so much in blockbusters.

I went to see "The Huntsman" the other day and I was like, "I wish this movie had been better for these ladies." I really do. I wanted to support it. I love Charlize [Theron], I love Jessica [Chastain], I love Emily [Blunt]. I wanted them to have a better movie. If this movie doesn't perform, it's a problem [for other female-driven movies]. They had endless resources — why couldn't they have given these girls a better movie?

Puberty taught Rufus Wainwright to love Shakespeare

"I don't think that [my mom] quite knew how to deal with it."

A.D. AMOROSI
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Wainwright will perform songs from Judy Garland's acclaimed catalog at Carnegie Hall next month. REDFERNS

Despite the Mark Ronson-produced "Out of the Game" in 2012, Rufus Wainwright's last decade has been spent away from the strictures of pop. His mad mixture of baroque cabaret, chamber music, opera — his "Prima Donna" opened in America at the Brooklyn Academy of Music — and '70s disco and '60s theater song, all rolled-up into elegant chord changes and winding, bassoon-like vocals and lyrics, speaks of love and loneliness. On his new album, "Take All My Loves: 9 Shakespeare Sonnets," William Shatner and Helena Bonham Carter share the limelight with the eclectic composer.

Around the time of "Out of the Game," you said you were giving mainstream pop a try. How did that go?

(Laughs) I adore that album. Arguably, it's one of my best-sounding albums. It wasn't a huge pop hit, but that's always the case whenever I put out a record. You have to have gargantuan hope in order to get out there and sell anything. It wasn't a hit, and that's OK. I won't be executed or anything.

You haven't done your Judy Garland show in a minute. What does several years away from that catalog do for your upcoming performances at Carnegie Hall?

It's been at least five years ago, at London's Royal Opera House. I'm going to do the whole kit and caboodle at Carnegie Hall again, and we'll see. I'm looking forward to finding out what being away from it means. It's one of the most vocally acrobatic exercises out there. I guess my voice is at its peak right now, as most voices are in their 40s. I just want to see just how high that peak is, and there's no better way of finding out than doing Judy Garland songs.

"Take All My Loves" comes from your time with director Robert Wilson and the late Michael Kamen. What connection did you have with Shakespeare before that?

My first ever contact with the sonnets was through my mother [the late Canadian folk singer-songwriter Kate McGarrigle]. She loved them. In fact, I think she preferred them to the plays. I grew up with her, and she was a single mother at the time. I was going through a period when I was like 12 or 13 where I was spending a lot of time alone in my room discovering myself, so there were certain stains that were new to my mom. I don't think that she quite knew how to deal with it, but her way of dealing was to say to me, "Shakespeare wrote a bit about what you are doing now." And she passed me Sonnet 129: 'Th' expense of spirit in a waste of shame.' [Shakespeare] was there for me from the beginning.

Obviously, this project has been gestating for a bit. Why is now a good time for the album?

I've done several different incarnations of these songs. In my mind, they are very malleable. Also, it is the 400th anniversary of his death.

How does one — how do you feel out — a Shakespeare lyric?

One of the key things was that I very much took the back seat. I mean with Shakespeare, who is the genius here? I have never questioned what it is he is trying to say. The music? I didn't write a lot of it with any instruments on hand. I'd be on a plane while reading them, and I'd just try to listen [and] a melody or would come to my head and I'd just grab hold. It's like being in a trance. It's amazing what people come up with when they shut up.

Electrifying.

How healthful are these Instagram snacks really?

And do they actually taste good?

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
letters@metro.us

Sometimes the #fitspiration that pops up in your feed is spot-on. But other times it's deceiving. A post-workout photo of someone chugging Vitamin Water? Little does that selfie-taker know that Vitamin Water is loaded with sugar. And some premade smoothies — that, granted, look delicious — can pack over 700 calories. That's more than a cheeseburger.

And what about the trendiest grab-and-go health bars? How do those measure up? Here, we break down seven trendy healthful snacks, exposing the health benefits of each. Plus, we see how it tastes. Because a healthful snack is useless if it tastes disgusting.

RXBAR

$2 each, Whole Foods

As you can plainly see on the package, there's nothing artificial in these protein bars. They come in eight flavors, like coffee chocolate, pumpkin spice and chocolate sea salt. All the bars have egg whites, dates and nuts, making them high in fiber and protein — and paleo-friendly. So, healthwise, RXBar holds up. As far as taste, the results were mixed when sampled by Metro staffers. Some thought they tasted great, others thought they were bland. The chocolate coconut and peanut butter flavors ranked the highest.

Health Warrior

$1.50 each, Whole Foods

Health Warrior brands itself as the only health bars with chia as the main ingredient, and it's true. They are packed with the nutrient-rich seed. Chia seeds are small but full of fiber, protein, healthful fats and magnesium. While the chia bar snacks are low in calories, sugar and sodium, they don't pack as much punch on the health front in terms of protein and other vitamins. Tastewise, if you are into the slimy texture of chia seeds, you'll like 'em. If not, this isn't the bar for you. Health Warrior also has bigger Superfood Protein bars, which have more calcium and protein while still being low in sodium and saturated fat.

Exo Cricket Flour Protein Bars

$2.30 each, select health retailers or exoprotein.com

Not much of a meat eater? Well, it turns out crickets are a terrific source of protein. The little bugs — which are ground up into a flour in the Exo bars — have more protein than beef and eggs, and more than twice the amount of iron that spinach has. The Exo bars are also high in fiber. But while it may only take you a minute to wolf down, the bars have 290 calories each — more than the others on this list. As for the taste, the bars come in flavors like banana bread and apple crisp. While you get a hint of those, overall, they taste like a bad, slightly sweet brownie.

EPIC Bar

$2 a bar, $5.95 for the jerky bites and nuts, Whole Foods

If you're a city dweller with a pioneering paleo heart, this one's for you. Meat is one of the obvious forms of protein and with EPIC bars, you can bite into bison, caribou, beef, chicken or bacon while out and about. The nutritional information differs for each, but each bar is about 200 calories, packs 11 grams of protein and is low in carbs. Surprisingly, it's low in sodium, too — most beef jerky has about 416 mg of sodium. The EPIC bars keep it around 300 and taste a lot less salty than regular beef jerky.

Expect Fenway fireworks with the Rockies in town

Boston's batting order should be able to have its way with Colorado.

MATTHEW BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

It will be a major disappointment if the Red Sox do not hammer the Rockies for at least 20 runs in the three-game series that starts at Fenway Park on Tuesday (7 p.m., NESN). Boston's offense has been that good and Colorado's pitching staff has been that bad.

The Red Sox lead the Majors in runs scored (256), they lead the Majors in hits (464), they are ninth in MLB in homers (53) and they lead MLB in on-base percentage (.359).

As for the Rockies pitching staff — a good chunk of the reason for their failures can be attributed to the fact that they play in the high altitude of Denver (imagine if the Red Sox' lineup played in that ballpark for 81 games). At the same time, Rockies' hurlers are far from lights out away from Coors Field. Last Thursday in St. Louis they gave up 13 runs in one game. Their team ERA on the season is an ugly 4.82. Only the Twins (4.91) and Reds (5.57) have worse team ERAs.

This could very well be a repeat of two weeks ago when the Red Sox posted three double-digit run games in three wins over Oakland. The Sox beat the A's 14-7, 13-5 and 13-3. Against Cleveland last Saturday they posted nine runs and on Sunday against the Indians they crossed the plate five times. In other words, a game in which the Sox score less than five runs these days is considered an off-night.

Finding a weak spot in the Red Sox' order has become an impossible task for opposing pitching staffs. Look at the Sox' batting leaders and there are different names across the board. Xander Bogaerts leads the team in batting average (.346), David Ortiz leads the team in home runs (11) and RBIs (37), and Jackie Bradley Jr. leads the team in OBP (.413). In the lineup that John Farrell trotted out Sunday against Cleveland, only catcher Christian Vazquez had an OBP of below .320. "They show up to play every single day," Farrell said about the players in his every day lineup. "We get just relentless at-bats and David continues to [hit]. His timing is outstanding. The power is obvious. There's just so many hard hit balls. Top to bottom we've been getting just a very, very good offensive approach."

Sox hurlers

David Price (6-1, 5.53 ERA) will look to make it three strong starts in a row Tuesday when he takes on a potent Rockies offense, which is led by Mark Reynolds (.323 batting average) and Nolan Arenado (14 homers, 34 RBIs). Price has allowed just three runs total in his last two starts.

Steven Wright is slated to start for the Sox on Wednesday against the Rockies while Clay Buchholz will look to break out of his funk on Thursday.

MLB power rankings by Ryan Hannable

No. 1

Cubs (29-13)

Jake Arrieta has a 1.29 ERA, the best in the game and Anthony Rizzo's 34 RBI are the second-most in the National League.

No. 2

Red Sox (27-17)

Jackie Bradley Jr. has a 27-game hit streak and is batting .342 on the year. It's not even best on the team as Xander Bogaerts is batting .346. They are 1-2 in the entire AL.

No. 3

Giants (27-19)

The Giants have won nine of their last 10 games and won a series against Chicago this weekend. Hunter Pence is swinging a hot bat as he has 32 RBI, tied for fourth in the NL.

No. 4

Nationals (27-17)

Washington is led by its pitching as Stephen Strasburg has seven wins, good for second in the NL and Gio Gonzalez has a 1.86 ERA, which is third in the NL.

No. 5

Orioles (26-16)

The Orioles have kept pace as they have won six of their last 10 games. Mark Trumbo has hit 13 home runs, tied for the most in the AL.

No. 6

Mariners (26-17)

The M's are led by their offense as they have scored the second-most runs in the American League. Robinson Cano's 39 RBI lead the AL.

No. 7

White Sox (22-16)

Pitching continues to lead Chicago as it has two pitchers with the top two ERAs in the American League. Chris Sale is at 1.58, while Jose Quintana is at 1.98.

No. 8

Mets (25-18)

By way of winning three straight games, the Mets have closed the gap in the NL East. Besides Yoenis Cespedes (14 homers, 35 RBI), they haven't done much at the plate.

No. 9

Rangers (25-19)

Texas has won six of 10. From the mound, Colby Lewis has rebounded nicely from a tough year in 2015 as he has a 2.75 ERA, good for 10th in the American League.

No. 10

Phillies (25-19)

With a minus-31 run differential it doesn't seem sustainable. The Phillies' pitching is tremendous but the lack of offensive production could burn them soon.

The best of the rest

- 11 — Pittsburgh Pirates
- 12 — St. Louis Cardinals
- 13 — Cleveland Indians
- 14 — Miami Marlins
- 15 — Kansas City Royals
- 16 — Colorado Rockies
- 17 — Los Angeles Dodgers
- 18 — New York Yankees
- 19 — Tampa Bay Rays
- 20 — Toronto Blue Jays

Aries Keep your emotions out of the equation when dealing with friends, relatives and neighbors. Take a moment to assess your situation and gain insight into your options.

Taurus You'll crave excitement. Sign up for something that will motivate you to interact with others and share ideas. Keeping your plans a secret won't help you make headway.

Gemini A financial move will help get rid of overdue bills. Using common sense and doing your own fact-finding will ensure the best results. Follow safety precautions.

Cancer Team up with someone who offers interesting options. Using alternative means and methods to get ahead will impress people looking for something unusual.

Leo You will crave something new. Join a group or get involved in an activity that promotes meeting new people or presenting what you have to offer. Romance is featured.

Virgo Look for activities you can do with a friend or children. Taking an interest in something you used to enjoy doing will encourage you to reunite with someone from your past.

Libra Put your energy into events and activities that promote personal progress and development. Pooling your resources with an important someone will help you build a better future.

Scorpio Don't feel you have to do everything yourself. Be open to suggestions, as it will help you expand an idea that you've been contemplating. Don't be afraid to do things differently.

Sagittarius Don't let the actions of others cause you to be confused. Separate from the crowd and focus on self-awareness and physical well-being. Romance is best kept out of the workplace.

Capricorn Use your imagination when it comes to financial matters, personal assets and home improvements. By doing things differently, you will find a way to cut costs.

Aquarius Trust in your abilities. You have the passion, stamina and wherewithal to bring about positive changes that will improve your personal and professional lives. Romance is encouraged.

Pisces Your power of persuasion will be stellar, but make sure that you have an ironclad plan in place before you entice others to follow your lead. A mistake will lead to discord. EUGENIA LAST

A Letter from Alan I. Green, M.D.

The Dartmouth-Hitchcock Department of Psychiatry is a major provider of psychiatric care in Northern New England. The Department provides direct psychiatric services at Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center (DHMC) and at a number of other sites, including Hanover Psychiatry, the New Hampshire Hospital (in Concord, NH), the White River Junction VA Medical Center (in White River Junction, Vermont) and the Riverview Hospital (in Augusta, Maine). In addition, the Department has a partnership arrangement with many mental health programs throughout the region to deliver specialized, evidence-based care.

As a component of Geisel School of Medicine, the Department has training programs in psychiatry and psychology, and fellowship programs in child psychiatry, geriatric psychiatry, addiction psychiatry, sleep medicine, neuropsychiatry, behavioral medicine, neuropsychology and neuroimaging. In addition, the Department is a site of cutting-edge translational research: nineteen members of the Department are currently principal investigators on externally funded research grants or contracts—from federal, state, foundation or industry sources. These Principal Investigators, along with dozens of their collaborators locally and across the country, are engaged in cutting-edge science, ranging from animal research, to neuroimaging, to proof of concept clinical trials, effectiveness studies and health services research. The major disease areas of research focus within the Department include: schizophrenia and other serious mental illness, substance abuse, traumatic brain injury, post traumatic stress disorder, autism, ADHD, depression, Alzheimers Disease, psycho-oncology and multiple sclerosis.

I encourage you to look through our behavioral health website to learn more our career opportunities and our work serving patients throughout the region.
